The town is working on getting approval of a $7.9-million loan for a new water plant. He said parking downtown remains an issue. The mayor also pointed out that the town board took a stand opposing fracking. He explained that three of the aldermen were “under the weather” and could not attend, and introduced the town staff members who were present.

The County Manager updated the group on a number of county items, including the latest on the Parker Meadows Recreational Complex, noting that grading was almost complete and with building construction expected to begin November 3rd. He explained the formation of a county staff committee to review health insurance matters, and touched on other issues such as the proposed expansion of the county landfill, the nearly completed property revaluation, having School Resource Officers (SROs) in all county schools, a grant that will benefit the Hospice House in Franklin, a potential new method for dealing with involuntary commitments, Macon County Public Health receiving a national award, and the ongoing implementation of NCFAST by the Department of Social Services. Commissioner Tate offered several comments on the continuing discussions with Jackson County officials regarding boundary line issues. Commissioner Beale shared information on the status of the truck turnaround area that has been funded for NC 28 between Franklin and Highlands. He also noted the lack of state funding for secondary roads and gave an update on matters regarding the North Carolina Association of County Commissioners.
