Home Heating Oil Leaks	Al Slagle filled in for Kathy Tinsley who could not be here today. Mr. Slagle said Ms. Tinsley had contacted several agencies and obtained several handouts for the committee members to review. Mr. Slagle explained that private/residential underground storage tanks (UST's) are not regulated like gasoline station and commercial tanks are regulated. He explained that unless there is a spill or release from a private UST, there are no reporting requirements. Typical signs of a spill include: lowered fuel levels inconsistent with use, stains on the soil, strong petroleum odors, puddles of oil, or dead vegetation around the fill or vent pipes. If these signs are present, the homeowner is to contact the North Carolina Department of Environment and Natural Resources - Hazardous Waste Section. The committee members reviewed all the handouts and pamphlets that Ms. Tinsley had provided. The committee members commended her for the effort and time she had put into gathering this information.
